

ily cerecahier

death of a moth
virginia woolf

THE
DEATH
OF THE MOTH
and Other Essays

Virginia Woolf

A Harvest/HBJ Book
Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, Publishers
San Diego New York London

The Death of the Moth

MOTHS that fly by day are not properly to be called moths; they do not excite that pleasant sense of dark autumn nights and ivy-blossom which the commonest yellow-underwing asleep in the shadow of the curtain never fails to rouse in us. They are hybrid creatures, neither gay like butterflies nor sombre like their own species. Nevertheless the present specimen, with his narrow hay-coloured wings, fringed with a tassel of the same colour, seemed to be content with life. It was a pleasant morning, mid-September, mild, benignant, yet with a keener breath than that of the summer months. The plough was already scoring the field opposite the window, and where the share had been, the earth was pressed flat and gleamed with moisture. Such vigour came rolling in from the fields and the down beyond that it was difficult to keep the eyes strictly turned upon the book. The rooks too were keeping one of their annual festivities; soaring round the tree tops until it looked as if a vast net with thousands of black knots in it had been cast up into the air; which, after a few moments sank slowly down upon the trees until every twig seemed to have a knot at the end of it. Then, suddenly, the net would be thrown into the air again in a wider circle this time, with the utmost clamour and vociferation, as though to be thrown into the air and settle slowly down upon the tree tops were a tremendously exciting experience.

THE DEATH OF THE MOTH

The same energy which inspired the rooks, the ploughmen, the horses, and even, it seemed, the lean bare-backed downs, sent the moth fluttering from side to side of his square of the window-pane. One could not help watching him. One was, indeed, conscious of a queer feeling of pity for him. The possibilities of pleasure seemed that morning so enormous and so various that to have only a moth's part in life, and a day moth's at that, appeared a hard fate, and his zest in enjoying his meagre opportunities to the full, pathetic. He flew vigorously to one corner of his compartment, and, after waiting there a second, flew across to the other. What remained for him but to fly to a third corner and then to a fourth? That was all he could do, in spite of the size of the downs, the width of the sky, the far-off smoke of houses, and the romantic voice, now and then, of a steamer out at sea. What he could do he did. Watching him, it seemed as if a fibre, very thin but pure, of the enormous energy of the world had been thrust into his frail and diminutive body. As often as he crossed the pane, I could fancy that a thread of vital light became visible. He was little or nothing but life.

Yet, because he was so small, and so simple a form of the energy that was rolling in at the open window and driving its way through so many narrow and intricate corridors in my own brain and in those of other human beings, there was something marvellous as well as pathetic about him. It was as if someone had taken a tiny bead of pure life and decking it as lightly as possible with down and feathers, had set it dancing and zigzagging to show us the true nature of life. Thus displayed one could not get over the strangeness of it. One is apt to forget all about life, seeing it humped and bossed and garnished and cumbered so that it has to move with the greatest circumspection and dignity. Again, the thought of all that life might have been had he been born in any other shape caused one to view his simple activities with a kind of pity.

THE DEATH OF THE MOTH

After a time, tired by his dancing apparently, he settled on the window ledge in the sun, and, the queer spectacle being at an end, I forgot about him. Then, looking up, my eye was caught by him. He was trying to resume his dancing, but seemed either so stiff or so awkward that he could only flutter to the bottom of the window-pane; and when he tried to fly across it he failed. Being intent on other matters I watched these futile attempts for a time without thinking, unconsciously waiting for him to resume his flight, as one waits for a machine, that has stopped momentarily, to start again without considering the reason of its failure. After perhaps a seventh attempt he slipped from the wooden ledge and fell, fluttering his wings, on to his back on the window sill. The helplessness of his attitude roused me. It flashed upon me that he was in difficulties; he could no longer raise himself; his legs struggled vainly. But, as I stretched out a pencil, meaning to help him to right himself, it came over me that the failure and awkwardness were the approach of death. I laid the pencil down again.

The legs agitated themselves once more. I looked as if for the enemy against which he struggled. I looked out of doors. What had happened there? Presumably it was mid-day, and work in the fields had stopped. Stillness and quiet had replaced the previous animation. The birds had taken themselves off to feed in the brooks. The horses stood still.

THE DEATH OF THE MOTH

Yet the power was there all the same, massed outside indifferent, impersonal, not attending to anything in particular. Somehow it was opposed to the little hay-coloured moth. It was useless to try to do anything. One could only watch the extraordinary efforts made by those tiny legs against an oncoming doom which could, had it chosen, have submerged an entire city, not merely a city, but masses of human beings; nothing, I knew had any chance against death. Nevertheless after a pause of exhaustion the legs fluttered again. It was superb this last protest, and so frantic that he succeeded at last in righting himself. One's sympathies, of course, were all on the side of life. Also, when there was nobody to care or to know, this gigantic effort on the part of an insignificant little moth, against a power of such magnitude, to retain what no one else valued or desired to keep, moved one strangely. Again, somehow, one saw life, a pure bead. I lifted the pencil again, useless though I knew it to be. But even as I did so, the unmistakable tokens of death showed themselves. The body relaxed, and instantly grew stiff. The struggle was over. The insignificant little creature now knew death. As I looked at the dead moth, this minute wayside triumph of so great a force over so mean an antagonist filled me with wonder. Just as life had been strange a few minutes before, so death was now as strange. The moth having righted himself now lay most decently and uncomplainingly composed. O yes, he seemed to say, death is stronger than I am.

Copyright © 1942 by Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, Inc.
Copyright © 1970 by Marjorie T. Parsons, Executrix

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopy, recording, or any information storage and retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publisher.

Printed in the United States of America

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Woolf, Virginia Stephen, 1882-1941.

The death of the moth and other essays.

(A Harvest book, HB 294)

I. Title.

[PR6045.072D4 1974] 824'.9'12 74-5021

ISBN 0-15-625234-1

C D E F G H I J

notes:

ily cere- cahiers is a collection of texts(fragments). it is a branch of the collective it is part of an ensemble. these texts function as starting points for dialogues within our practice. we also love to share them with guests and visitors of our projects.

the first copy of ily cere- cahier 46 was printed in september 2026

1	the artist as producer in times of crisis	okwui enwezor
2	the carrier bag theory of fiction	ursula k. le guin
3	arts of noticing	anna lowenhaupt tsing
4	whatever & bartleby	giorgio agamben
5	notes toward a politics of location	adrienne rich
6	the intimacy of strangers	merlin sheldrake
7	the zero world	achille mbembe
8	why do we say that cows don't do anything?	vinciane despret
9	nautonomat operating manual	raqs media collective
10	on plants, or the origin of our world	emanuele cocchia
11	hydrofeminism: or, on becoming a body of water	astrida neimanis
12	the gift and the given	eduardo viveiros de castro
13	the three figures of geontology	elizabeth a. povinelli
14	what lies beneath	george monbiot
15	sculpture not to be seen	elena filipovic
16	the onion	kurt schwitters
17	tentacular thinking	donna j. haraway
18	toward a symbiotic way of thought	vincent zonca
19	living with birds	len howard
20	why look at animals?	john berger
21	quantum listening	pauline Oliveros
22	politics of installation	boris groys
23	some notes on drawing	amy sillman
24	depiction, object, event	jeff wall
25	cyber-teratologies	rosi braidotti
26	love your monsters	bruno latour
27	arts of living on a damaged planet	multiple authors
28	what is it like to be a bat?	thomas nagel
29	dazzling diversity: the biology of chiroptera	tessa laird
30	what is an owl?	stephen moss
31	the gender of sound	anne carson
32	the euphio question	kurt vonnegut
33	listening to the tree of life	karen bakker
34	organic music societies	multiple authors
35	klittenbandjes	hay wijnhoven
36	a fable for tomorrow	rachel carson
37	listening music	john maus
38	wolf trilogy	angela carter
39	over leven	sander turnhout
40	hele dagen tussen levende wezens	estelle zhong mengual
41	the earthly community	achille mbembe
42	riding the blinds	maggie nelson
43	notes on gesture	giorgio agamben
44	the living mountain	nan shepherd
45	the ecological crisis as a crisis of sensibility	baptiste morizot
46	death of a moth	virginia woolf
47	the birds	aristophanes
48	anthropomorphism, anthropectomy and anthropocentrism	susana monsó
49	pretenders	matthew gandy
50	finding the mother tree	suzanne simard

